

Best Of LA – Week Of January 18

January 16, 2016

Kellie Fell

This week kicks off with the return of winter's highly-anticipated, and always super popular, dineL.A. week. Along with the Angeleno-favorite, a new artisan ice cream shop will join the Abbot Kinney scene, and a new food truck offering a truly authentic New York slice will not only be dishing up tasty pies, but will be serving up a free treat on opening day. Not to be outdone by all the exciting new eats, the arts are in full-swing this week too. An Italian ensemble performs music taken from the personal diary of an orphan who studied with Vivaldi, a new exhibit opens at the GRAMMY Museum dedicated to the life of Otis Redding, and a full day of art, performance, and all-ages activities at UCLA's Fowler museum will round out a week full of activities for everyone to enjoy.

Friday, January 22

New Food Truck Opening (+ Free Garlic Knots)

Made in Brooklyn Food Truck

1228 Glendon Ave.

Los Angeles, CA 90024

www.mibpizza.com

Any east coast transplants lamenting over the loss of their beloved classic New York slice will want to head straight to the opening of the new food truck 'Made in Brooklyn.' Chef, owner, and native Brooklynite Sean Popock is passionate that pizza is "meant to be eaten the right way: with your hands," and will be preparing the pies with fresh, high-quality ingredients. House-made tomato sauce, sausage, meatballs, and pizza dough will be prepared in a truck tricked out with a double-deck pizza oven, and all the same equipment found in New York's best pizzerias. The truck officially opens today, and celebrates their grand opening by offering free Garlic Knots to all guests who show they are following the truck on Instagram (@madeinbrooklynypizza) from 11:30am – 2:30pm. Like its food truck brethren, you can keep up with the location of the Made in Brooklyn truck on Instagram and Twitter (@MIBpizza).

<http://losangeles.cbslocal.com/top-lists/best-of-la-week-of-january-18/>

