

Former New Yorkers Flock to L.A. With Redefined Red Sauce and ‘Game-Changing’ Chicken

January 7, 2016

Andy Wang

Made in Brooklyn pizza (Photo:Facebook.com/MadeInBrooklynNYPizza)

For pizza lovers looking for an authentic NY-slice-joint experience, Prime Pizza on Fairfax Avenue is pretty close with its thin-crust pepperoni and plain options. (Let's not get into the sausage-with-kale pie.) And the Made in Brooklyn truck is about to debut on the streets of LA with slices that have dazzled at private parties. Word is, the thin crust from chef/owner/former Brooklynite Sean Popock is legit, and the house-made tomato sauce, sausage, meatballs and garlic knots should be crowd-pleasers. We're not sure how the truck's pulled-pork pizza relates to anything we've had in New York but will concede that the point of Italian-American food is the freedom to riff before you fold it, fold it, fold it.

<http://observer.com/2016/01/former-new-yorkers-flock-to-l-a-with-redefined-red-sauce-and-game-changing-chicken/>